Our team established a Definition of Done that included frequent GitHub pushes and regular progress updates on Discord. This approach ensured that we could easily keep track of completed tasks and identify those that required further attention.

We also agreed on a consistent coding style: using 4 spaces for indentation and placing comments either above functions or inline with the relevant code. By the time style guides were introduced in class, we had already implemented many of our functionalities and felt confident in our ability to maintain consistency without needing additional discussion.
